The screenshots illustrate the PubMed search process. The first screenshot shows the search bar with the word "diabetes" entered. The second screenshot shows search results for "diabetes", with a callout box pointing to the "Text availability" filter set to "Full text". The third screenshot shows a detailed view of a specific article, "Fibroblast Cell-Based Therapy for Experimental Autoimmune Diabetes", with a callout box pointing to the abstract text. Red arrows connect the callout boxes to the corresponding elements in the screenshots.

Full Text

Not all articles in PubMed are in full text. You can use filters so only full text articles are returned.

Permalinks

If PubMed Central has the full text of the article, you can use the URL in the address bar as the permalink.

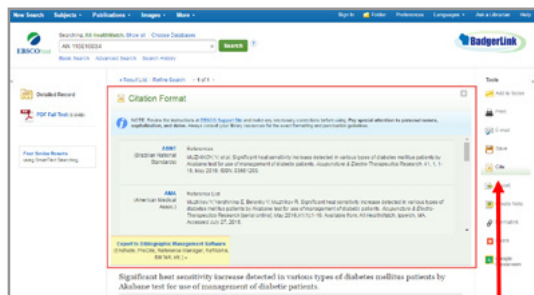

If PubMed links to EBSCO for the full text of the article, use the EBSCO permalink available from the "Tools menu on the right side of the page.

Citations

All the information for a citation is provided in PubMed but the information is not given in a specific citation style.

If the article directs you to the article in EBSCO, all EBSCO resources have a citation feature available from "Tools" menu on the right side of the page.

Copyright

When directed to EBSCO, the EBSCO copyright applies. Go to the EBSCO License Agreement page for more information.

Articles available in PubMed Central are still protected by copyright. Use materials within the bounds of fair use guidelines. Go to the PMC Copyright Notice page for more information.
